TWO MINUTES BEFORE YOU PRINT

How this chart works, and why it is not a bribe

You are not paying your child to behave. You are making a deal visible. Screens are part of childhood now, and pretending otherwise starts a fight you cannot win. What children need is a clear, warm path: here is how screen time is earned, here is how much a star is worth, and here is how we end well. When the deal is on the fridge, you stop being the referee. The chart is.

AGES 5 TO 7

Reward daily. Young children live in today. Count stars together at teatime and let them spend them the same evening. Every star is five minutes, so three stars is fifteen minutes of screen time.

AGES 8 TO 11

Reward weekly. Older children can hold a bigger deal. Tally the week on Sunday and let them choose when to spend their minutes. Saving up is allowed and worth praising.

THE FIVE HOUSE RULES OF THE CHART

1. Set the rows together on Sunday. A chart done to a child gets ignored. A chart built with a child gets defended by them.
2. Earned stars are never taken back. Consequences live elsewhere. The chart only ever pays out.
3. One star is five minutes of screen time, on any screen, the same rate as the Guided Childhood app. Want a different rate? Agree it together, write it on the chart, and keep to it. If a token says 15 minutes, the timer says 15 minutes.
4. Use the ending well card five minutes before time is up. Endings are where the battles live, so we rehearse them.
5. Keep it warm. The chart is a game the family wins together, not a surveillance system.

Print the charts on A4, laminate them if you can, and tick with a dry wipe pen so one print lasts all year. The token sheet prints best on card.
