The 30 Day Screen Reset Journal

One small change a day. Five faces each night.
Then your family decides what stays.

30 small changes

Five faces each night

The line we draw

Children 8 and up, with a grown up

A reset, not a ban. The whole family tries the changes, the grown ups too, ten minutes every evening. Younger brothers and sisters can draw along.

READ THIS TOGETHER FIRST

Ten minutes, every evening, together

Thirty days, one small change a day. Nothing gets taken away for good and nobody is on trial. You try things as a family, notice how the days feel, and on day thirty you sit down and decide together what stays. The grown ups do every change too, which is the bit that makes it fair.

EVERY EVENING

1

Tick the change

Did we do today's change? Tick it. Did not quite? Leave it empty, no fuss.

2

Circle a face

Each person circles one of the five faces for how today felt.

3

Write one line

One thing we noticed. A word, a sentence or a drawing.

4

Read tomorrow's

Read the next change out loud, so nobody gets a surprise.

Up to four of you on each day. Grown ups write their names here too.

OUR DEAL FOR THIRTY DAYS

1. A missed day is just a missed day. Leave the tick empty and carry on tomorrow.

2. Nobody uses this journal to tell anybody off.

3. Every face is allowed. We ask about each other's faces and never argue with them.

4. The grown ups do every change too, phones included.

5. If a change does not fit our family, we swap it for one that does and write it in.

DiGi says: keep the journal and a pen where you all walk past every evening. The fridge, the kitchen table, next to wherever the phones charge.

Children under 8 can join in by drawing: their own face, or a picture of what they noticed. This journal is a family activity for trying small changes together. It is not a treatment for anything.

Where we start

No judgement on this page. It is a snapshot of how things are now, so that on day thirty you have something real to look back at. Fill it in together, the grown ups' screens included.
